

Trevor Hood

When it comes to finding opportunities to improve performance, a business owner needs someone who will look beyond the numbers. Trevor Hood's experience in a variety of industries and transactions allows him to do just that.

Trevor has extensive experience in business valuation, family law litigation, shareholder and partnership disputes, shareholder agreements, and succession planning. But it's in business valuation that Trevor really hits his stride.

"My clients appreciate the importance of working with a Chartered Business Valuator," says Trevor. "And I enjoy working with businesses to help them understand their potential value, how they can add value to their bottom line."

For Trevor, success requires collaboration. That's why he first listens to what his clients are trying to achieve, and then joins forces with them to develop practical, achievable solutions. He has worked with a variety of industries and niche companies, and uses that experience to find the best option for his clients.

Trevor is a highly regarded speaker, and has appeared on Toronto's CITY-TV news program Cable Pulse 24 as an expert on succession issues. He has also made presentations on business valuations, corporate finance and succession planning to a number of organizations.

Trevor is a strong advocate for the Chartered Business Valuator (CBV) profession and a member of the Communications Committee of the Canadian Institute of Chartered Business Valuators. He has worked with McMaster University's DeGroote School of Business to provide practical experience to MBA students. Away from the office, Trevor spends time with his wife and three daughters, and plays hockey and golf.
